ABOUT THE ORGANIZER

Tezpur University, located about 200 km from Guwahati, in a picturesque setting with the mighty Brahmaputra flowing nearby. The university boasts of high academic standards and is a seat of higher learning in Northeast. The Department of Physics, celebrating 25 years of establishment, offers both Integrated Masters and Master degree in Physics programs with various specializations. In addition, research is conducted in soft matter physics, nano-materials for microwaves and imaging applications, plasmonics, lasers, optical sensing, quantum materials, collective non-equilibrium dynamics and host of other current topics both in theoretical and experimental physics. The purpose of the conference is to provide a platform for discussion on the current state-of-the-art in CMP, in particular for participants of the northeast region of India.

ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

The 31st National Conference, Condensed Matter Days, CMDAYS 2023, will be held at the Department of Physics, Tezpur University, Assam, India. While the primary focus areas have been condensed matter physics, following the trend with the current and emerging field of research in multidisciplinary areas, the upcoming conference theme extends two extremes of condensed matter physics from the studies of quantum science and technology to active matters interwoven with other interdisciplinary sciences. CMDAYS provides a unique platform for young researchers/scientists and science entrepreneurs to present their work/innovations on chosen topics of technological and theoretical relevance. It emphasizes the visibility of the works of young researchers/entrepreneurs in the broader arena of condensed matter physics. The conference anticipates a vibrant atmosphere with the presence of a large physicist community for sharing and creating new ideas with opportunities for collaboration between students and researchers from various branches of science and technology.
