We are pleased to announce that a three-day national conference on the Indigenous and lesser studied languages (ILSL) of the North East India will be held from October 29th – 31st, 2019 at Tezpur University, Assam, India. The Conference is organized by the Centre for Endangered Languages at the University to commemorate the year of Indigenous Languages announced by UNESCO.

As you are aware, more than 200 languages of various language families are spoken in North East India, perhaps the richest, most diverse, linguistic area in the whole of the Asian continent. As a matter of fact, it is one of the few most significant linguistic areas of the entire world. Unfortunately, however, the majority of the languages of North East remain to this day almost completely undescribed such that the region contains one of the highest concentrations of undescribed languages in the world. At the same time, most of these languages, which are rather small with just 1000 to 10,000 speakers, are increasingly under the threat of becoming extinct forever as a result of the new generations of these communities sharply shifting to dominant languages in order to ensure jobs for themselves and related advantages and prestige.

Revitalizing or saving the endangered languages from the hegemony of the dominant languages of the Market today may appear to be rather a utopian idea, but linguists have to play their own role here. The fact remains that it is because of the hard but dedicated work of a group of linguists committed to the cause of endangered languages the world is becoming increasingly aware of the danger of linguistic hegemony, a real threat to cultural diversity and cultural heritage of humanity.

The Centre for Endangered Languages at Tezpur University, which was established in 2014 by the UGC as the nodal centre for two more such Centres at Rajiv Gandhi University, Arunachal Pradesh, and Sikkim University, Gangtok, is currently studying seven languages of North East, all previously undescribed and endangered to varying degrees. It has in the meantime published 6 (six) Learner's Books in each of these languages, which record their sound systems, the core aspects of their grammar, their basic vocabulary, basic conversations, rituals, short stories, folklores/folktales, lullabies, proverbs and also pictorial glossaries of their traditional artefacts. The Centre is also preparing three separate volumes on the phonology, morphology and syntax of these languages, which are expected to be completed by the end of the current year.

The Centre hopes that the current seminar can make us all more aware of the unparalleled linguistic richness of North East India, leading us to the realization that we must join hands in order to protect and preserve this great storehouse of cognitive and cultural diversity. The conference expects to accommodate all the linguistic aspects of the languages of Northeast India.

We invite papers in all areas of research on various linguistic themes including but not limited to syntax, morphology, phonetics and phonology, cognitive linguistics, sociolinguistics, psycholinguistics, neurolinguistics, computational linguistics, semantics, language education, language acquisition and learning, bi/multilingualism, discourse analysis, pluriliteracy, inter-cultural and globalisation, language endangerment, capacity building, revitalization etc. Abstracts are invited from students/scholars/researchers and teachers who have been working on lesser studied languages of Northeast including the state of Sikkim for 15 mins presentation and 5 mins discussion. Abstracts should not be more than 500 words including references. The general text should be typed in 'Times New Roman' 12 font size and data must be represented by using IPA fonts in Unicode. The abstracts should be sent to:  cfeltezu@gmail.com
